NETWORKING

Networking should be done before you think of getting a job. It involves building relationships, getting to know people for who they are, rather than what they do.

The following three steps should help you build an effective network.

1. Identify the top five people in your world that you consider leaders in each area of your life.; professional, personal, spiritual and social
2. Pick two people from each category and ask why you think they are leaders.

3. Categorize each person on your list.
  - decision-maker
  - door-opener
  - data provider

This exercise will help you determine who to contact, or when and why you should contact them.

When you do need to contact a person in your group you will have established a relationship that has been beneficial to both of you.

This brings a wish your way-
Good health
good luck, and happiness
For today and every day.

Please read page two of this newsletter to see the program presented in the LRC by Compensatory Education. The program was a tribute to Presidents and Black History Month. The students researched their topic, wrote comments, and/or displayed posters about their topic. Those attending the presentation enjoyed an excellent program! .

One virtual Japanese university suggests the answer to the new generation of teachers and learners is in the palm of our hand — the next small thing in higher ed. Fukuoka-based Cyber University delivers its courses over SoftBank 3G smart phones. Japanese students both old and young seem to love the idea. Travelers packed on the subway line can take a cellular course on their way home. Here is the kicker— the first course is free, that is, if you buy into the provider, equipment, and transmission. Several U.S.-based institutions will soon offer full-motion courses in real time, all with faculty voiceovers, student chat rooms, and self-paced tutorials. State and community colleges in Louisiana and Indiana are experimenting with digital media on mobile devices.
